Statement from Seattle School Board related to SEA Vote of No Confidence

“We are so pleased that SEA members have voted to approve a three-year contract for our educators,” said School Board Director Steve Sundquist, board spokesperson for labor negotiations. “SEA also approved a vote of no-confidence in the Superintendent. The School Board and the Superintendent have committed to an ambitious change agenda in pursuit of improved student achievement and closing the achievement gap in our community. In that process we have undergone substantial change. We recognize that change isn’t easy and the pace of change isn’t always agreed upon. As leaders, we remain committed to listening to the ideas and concerns of our families, staff, and communities, and then taking the actions that we believe are in the best interest of our students.”
